The movie starts in the mid 1990's in the Grand Central Station, where we see the Russian princess Catherine and her cousin Ivan Volkoff. Catherine, after killing her husband, is now on the run and asks Ivan to help her escape. She travels to the Caribbean and along the way she meets another female member of the Bolshoi ballet, Olga. Olga has a dark past and is stealing money from Ivan's casino. Meanwhile, Ivan gets a tip off that there is a drug smuggling operation going on in the Grand Central Station. He goes there, but is soon killed by the KGB. When Catherine realizes that her past also involves the KGB, she uses Olga as a way to get her to help her escape and get revenge. She takes the two girls to Las Vegas, where she finds a friend who tells her the KGB is still after her. At first, she does not believe him, but soon finds out the truth. Ivan's plan was not to kill her, but to kill Olga, but she double crossed him. After the final showdown with the KGB, Olga manages to escape, but Ivan disappears. The movie ends with Olga leaving the country. The movie includes 10 languages, with English, French, Russian, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Polish, Italian, French, and Romanian. These 10 languages are all that are needed for this movie. The actors also play all the parts. The movie has a decent acting, where Michael Lonsdale and Michael Stuhlbarg are excellent actors, even though they both play the same role. Other good actors in the movie include Stellan Skarsgård, Jimmi Simpson, Danny Huston, and even one of the guys from Disney's animated movie Enchanted, Kevin Kline. A good bit of dialogue is in English. The movie can be watched in English in parts. While watching the movie, one can hear the Spanish soundtrack. It is well done, and helps the movie to get more lively. A few bad things in the movie: - The people wearing long beards, are not portrayed well. They are too heavy on the beard and seem to have problems taking off the facial hair. - The costumes and set are not that good. This movie is a good story, with a fun plot. The action of the movie is good, with a good ending. The movie is a bit too long, at just over 90 minutes
